SUSAN RICHARD NELSON, United States District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the Court on Defendant National Hockey League's (the "NHL") motion to dismiss plaintiff Todd Harvey's claims in the Complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction. [Doc. No. 41.] See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2). For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants the motion and dismisses Harvey's claims without prejudice.

II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The general facts pertaining to the underlying MDL are set forth in previous rulings from this Court, and are incorporated herein by reference. See NHL Players’ Concussion Injury Litig., No. 14-MDL-2551 [Doc. No. 126], 2015 WL 1334027 (D. Minn. March 25, 2015); NHL Players’ Concussion Injury Litig., No. 14-MDL-2551, 327 F.R.D. 245 (D. Minn. 2018). Stated briefly, this case arises from repetitive head trauma—including concussive and sub-concussive head injuries—sustained by former NHL players during their professional careers. (Class Action Compl. [Doc No. 1] (“Compl.”) ¶¶ 1-9.) The NHL, according to Plaintiffs, knew or should have known, that by “promoting fighting” in the sport, players would suffer brain trauma with debilitating long-term effects. (Id. ¶¶ 5-9, 24, 430.) The effects suffered from this NHL-sanctioned fighting include “memory loss, dementia, depression, [Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy] ‘CTE’, and its related symptoms.” (Id. ¶ 318.) Moreover, Plaintiffs allege that the NHL concealed studies linking repetitive concussive events to neurodegenerative conditions. (Id. ¶¶ 27-37.)

Based on these allegations, Plaintiffs assert six counts against the NHL. (See id. ¶¶ 480-535.) These counts mimic all six counts in the MDL complaint. See NHL Players’ Concussion Injury Litig., No. 14-MDL-2551 [Doc. No. 615]. In Count I, Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that the NHL knew, or reasonably should have known, that (i) the head impacts Plaintiffs suffered were likely to substantially increase risks of neurodegenerative disorders; (ii) the NHL had a duty to advise Plaintiffs of these risks, but concealed and misled Plaintiffs concerning these risks; and (iii) the NHL recklessly endangered Plaintiffs. (Compl. ¶¶ 480-483.) In Count II, Plaintiffs allege that, as a result of the NHL's misconduct, they have experienced injuries that have increased their risk of developing neurodegenerative disorders, and that costly medical monitoring procedures are necessary to enable Plaintiffs to obtain early detection and diagnosis of those conditions. (Id. ¶¶ 484-500.)

Counts III and IV assert negligence-based causes of action. (Id. ¶¶ 501-518.) In Count III, Plaintiffs allege that the NHL owed its players a duty of reasonable care to manage player safety and the NHL breached this duty by, among other things, promoting a culture of violence and failing to warn players of the potential negative effects of head injuries. (Id. ¶¶ 501-508.) As a result of this breach, Plaintiffs allege they have suffered or are suffering injury, including long-term neurological damage. (Id. ¶¶ 506-508.) In Count IV, Plaintiffs assert a claim for negligent misrepresentation by omission. (Id. ¶¶ 509-518.) They allege that a special relationship existed between the NHL and Plaintiffs by virtue of the NHL's "superior special knowledge of material medical information" that was not readily available to players and by virtue of the NHL's undertaking to communicate some safety information to players and the public, such that the NHL had a duty to disclose accurate information to Plaintiffs. (Id. ¶ 510.) According to Plaintiffs, the NHL breached its duty by negligently omitting material information regarding the link between the type of head injuries sustained in the NHL and cognition-impairing conditions. (Id. ¶¶ 516-517.) Plaintiffs assert that they reasonably relied to their detriment on these negligent misrepresentations by omission. (Id. ¶ 513.)

Finally, Counts V and VI assert fraud-based causes of action. (Id. ¶¶ 519-535.) In Count V, Plaintiffs assert a claim for fraudulent concealment based on the NHL's alleged knowing concealment of material information regarding the risks of head injuries suffered while playing in the NHL, the NHL's alleged expectation that Plaintiffs would rely on its silence and fraudulent concealment, and Plaintiff's alleged reasonable reliance on that silence to their detriment. (Id. ¶¶ 519-526.) And, in Count VI, Plaintiffs assert a claim for fraud by omission and failure to warn. (Id. ¶¶ 527-535.) In this fraud claim, Plaintiffs allege the NHL was in a position of superior knowledge about the long-term effects of head hits. (Id. ¶ 532.) According to Plaintiffs, the NHL breached its duty to disclose this information and Plaintiffs reasonably relied on these fraudulent omissions to their detriment. (Id. ¶¶ 534-535.)

Harvey, a Canadian citizen, is the only remaining plaintiff in this action. (Id. ¶¶ 122-127.) Harvey played in the NHL from 1993 to 2006. (Id. ¶ 122.) To support the allegations above, he asserts that he suffered roughly eight concussions and numerous head injuries. (Id. ¶¶ 124-125.) As a result of his time in the NHL, he also alleges that he presently “suffers from post-concussion symptoms including, but not limited to, headaches, memory loss, and sleep problems” and “is at an increased risk for developing serious, latent neurodegenerative disorders and diseases.” (Id. ¶¶ 126-127.) Harvey's NHL career spanned “671 regular season games and 61 playoff games” and he was involved in 55 hockey fights. (Id. ¶¶ 123-124.) The Complaint is silent about the location of these hockey games or fights. Harvey never played on an NHL team in Minnesota. (Id.)

In this motion, the NHL challenges this Court's personal jurisdiction over Harvey and his claims. (See Def.'s Mem. Of Law in Supp. Of Mot. To Dismiss Compl. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2) [Doc. No. 43] (“Def.'s Mem. Dismiss”).) The NHL—organized as an unincorporated association (Compl. ¶ 256)—argues that it is not subject to general jurisdiction in Minnesota because its headquarters and principal place of business is in New York. (Def.’s Mem. Dismiss at 1, 4-6.) As to specific jurisdiction, the NHL argues that Harvey does not allege any connection between his claims and the NHL’s contacts with Minnesota. (Id. at 2, 6-9.)

Harvey, proceeding pro se, did not respond to the NHL’s motion.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

To survive a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2), the plaintiff must make a prima facie showing that the court’s exercise of jurisdiction is proper. Fastpath, Inc. v. Arbela Techs. Corp., 760 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2014). The plaintiff may meet this burden by pleading facts sufficient to “support a reasonable inference that the defendant[] can be subjected to jurisdiction within the [forum] state.” Dever v. Hentzen Coatings, Inc., 380 F.3d 1070, 1072 (8th Cir. 2004). When—as is the case here—the Court has not conducted an evidentiary hearing, it must view the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and resolve all factual conflicts in that party’s favor. Pangaea, Inc. v. Flying Burrito LLC, 647 F.3d 741, 745 (8th Cir. 2011). Yet “the party seeking to establish the court’s personal jurisdiction carries the burden of proof and that burden does not shift to the party challenging jurisdiction.” Fastpath, 760 F.3d at 820.

B. The Law of Personal Jurisdiction

In order to find that personal jurisdiction over a defendant is proper, a federal court sitting in diversity must first determine that certain state and constitutional prerequisites have been met. Wessels, Arnold & Henderson v. Nat'l Med. Waste, Inc., 65 F.3d 1427, 1431 (8th Cir. 1995). Even here, when an action is directly filed into the MDL, both state and constitutional prerequisites must be satisfied. See, e.g., In re Heartland Payment Sys., Inc. Customer Data Sec. Breach Litig., No. CIV.A. H-10-171, 2011 WL 1232352, *5-13 (S.D. Tex. Mar. 31, 2011) (dismissing a case directly filed in the MDL court for lack of personal jurisdiction when defendant did not stipulate to 12(b)(2) defense).¹ First, the court must consider whether the requirements of Minnesota's long-arm statute have been satisfied. Second, the court must ask whether exercising jurisdiction over the defendant would comport with the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In Minnesota, however, these two inquiries combine into a single due process examination, because the state long-arm statute has been held to be co-extensive with the constitutional bounds of jurisdiction. See Soo Line R.R. Co. v. Hawker Siddeley Canada, Inc., 950 F.2d 526, 528 (8th Cir. 1991) (citing Rostad v. On-Deck, Inc., 372 N.W.2d 717, 719 (Minn. 1985)).

The Due Process Clause permits a court to exercise personal jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant when that defendant has “certain minimum contacts with [the forum state] such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend ‘traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.’” Int’l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945) (citation omitted). Underlying this standard is the conviction that “those who live or operate primarily outside a State have a . . . right not to be subjected to judgment in its courts as a general matter.” J. McIntyre Mach., Ltd. v. Nicastro, 564 U.S. 873, 881 (2011); see also Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Superior Court, 137 S. Ct. 1773, 1781 (2017) (requiring non-resident class members to establish jurisdiction, on a plaintiff-by-plaintiff, claim-by-claim assessment, by demonstrating that the claims involve “an activity or occurrence that takes place in the forum State.”) (internal quotation omitted). Thus, the Supreme Court has made clear that there must be some showing that the defendant’s “conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there.” World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297 (1980).

From these core principles, the Eighth Circuit has distilled a five-factor test to be used in analyzing the propriety of a court’s exercise of personal jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant. This test considers: (1) the nature and quality of the contacts with the forum state; (2) the quantity of the contacts with the forum state; (3) the relation of the cause of action to the contacts; (4) the interest of the forum state in providing a forum for its residents; and (5) the convenience of the parties. See Wells Dairy, Inc. v. Food Movers Int’l, Inc., 607 F.3d 515, 518 (8th Cir. 2010) (citing Bell Paper Box, Inc. v. U.S. Kids, Inc., 22 F.3d 816, 819 (8th Cir. 1994)). “The first three factors are closely related and are of primary importance, while the last two factors are secondary.” Pecoraro v. Sky Ranch for Boys, Inc., 340 F.3d 558, 562 (8th Cir. 2003) (citing Digi-Tel Holdings, Inc. v. Proteq Telecomm. (PTE), Ltd., 89 F.3d 519, 523 (8th Cir. 1996)).

Moreover, the third factor, the relation of the cause of action to the contacts, serves to distinguish the appropriate theory of jurisdiction: general or specific. “A court with general jurisdiction may hear any claim against that defendant, even if all the incidents underlying the claim occurred in a different State.” Bristol–Myers Squibb, 137 S. Ct. at 1780 (emphasis in original). Specific personal jurisdiction, on the other hand, “is very different.” Id. “In order for a state court to exercise specific jurisdiction, the suit must arise out of or relate to the defendant’s contacts with the forum.” Id. (citations and alterations omitted).

1. General Personal Jurisdiction

At the outset, the Court concludes that general or “all-purpose” jurisdiction over the NHL is clearly lacking. As the Eighth Circuit has explained “general jurisdiction refers to the power of a state to adjudicate any cause of action involving a particular defendant, regardless of where the cause of action arose, while specific jurisdiction requires that the cause of action arise from or relate to a defendant’s actions within the forum state.” Wells Dairy, Inc., 607 F.3d at 518 (internal quotation and citation omitted). To assert general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation, a court must first determine that the corporation’s affiliations with the forum are so “continuous and systematic” as to “render [it] essentially at home in the forum State.” Daimler AG v. Bauman, 134 S. Ct. 746, 751 (2014) (internal quotations and alterations omitted).

Two places according to Daimler that are “paradigm all-purpose forums” for a corporation are where it is incorporated and where it has its principal place of business. Id. at 760. This standard has been applied by other courts to unincorporated associations, like the NHL. See Waldman v. Palestine Liberation Org., 835 F.3d 317, 332 (2d Cir. 2016) (“Daimler’s reasoning was based on an analogy to general jurisdiction over individuals, and there is no reason to invent a different test for general personal jurisdiction depending on whether the defendant is an individual, a corporation, or another entity”); Dallas Texans Soccer Club v. Major League Soccer Players Union, 247 F. Supp. 3d 784, 788-89 (E.D. Tex. 2017) (applying the general jurisdiction test in Daimler to a player’s union similarly organized as an unincorporated association.).²

Here, the NHL is not “essentially at home” in Minnesota. The parties agree that the NHL is headquartered in New York, but the Complaint is silent about whether the NHL’s principal place of business is in a different State. (Compare Def.’s Mem. Dismiss at 6 with Compl. ¶ 255.) The NHL alleges, without opposition, that its principal place of business is also in New York. (Def.’s Mem. Dismiss at 6); see also Hertz Corp. v. Friend, 559 U.S. 77, 92-93 (2010) (finding a corporation’s main headquarters usually serves as a corporation’s place of business). The Court finds—in the absence of any contrary evidence—that the NHL is a non-resident entity, with its principal place of business in New York. Harvey appears to agree tacitly with this result, because the Complaint also alleges the NHL had the necessary “substantial and continuous” contacts required for this Court to exercise jurisdiction over foreign corporations. (Compl. ¶ 65.)

² In Daimler, the Supreme Court also applied the “essentially at home” standard to an unincorporated entity. The Supreme Court held that MBUSA was not subject to general personal jurisdiction in California because it was neither incorporated in California, nor was its principal place of business there. Daimler, 134 S. Ct. at 761-62. MBUSA is not a corporation. It is a Delaware limited liability company. Id. at 751-52.

Nonetheless, while the Complaint alleges “substantial and continuous” contacts by the NHL in this forum, Harvey fails to sufficiently allege any such contacts. For instance, he alleges that the NHL has a franchised club and team in Minnesota, but acknowledges that the NHL has clubs and teams in several other states. (Id. ¶¶ 1, 255 (recognizing the NHL “operates out of many different cities and states within the United States”).) Thus, taking into account the NHL’s “activities nationwide . . . [t]hese contacts are not so continuous and systematic” as to render the NHL essentially at home here. See, e.g., Dallas Texans Soccer Club, 247 F. Supp. 3d at 788-89 (finding a player’s union representing 588 players from twenty teams nationwide was not “at home” in a forum, despite having 59 members and two representatives from two teams within the forum). As such, the Court may not exercise general jurisdiction over the NHL, and thus turns to an analysis of specific jurisdiction.

2. Specific Personal Jurisdiction

When considering specific jurisdiction, the Court examines the nature, quality, and quantity of NHL’s contacts with Minnesota, and those contacts’ relation to Plaintiffs’ suit. First, the Court finds that the NHL’s alleged contacts with Minnesota in the Complaint are limited to: (1) NHL players, other than Harvey, who were residents of Minnesota and suffered from repetitive head trauma as a result of the NHL’s acts and/or omissions; and (2) NHL players, other than Harvey, who played for a Minnesota team in the NHL and suffered head trauma as a result of the NHL’s acts and/or omissions. (See Compl. ¶¶ 88-89, 95, 109, 170, 186, 203, 206, 360, 394.)

Fatal to Harvey and his claims are that the contacts pleaded in the Complaint do not specifically relate to his causes of action. These attenuated contacts are clearly not connected to his claims, and “[w]hen there is no such connection, specific jurisdiction is lacking regardless of the extent of a defendant’s unconnected activities in the State.” Bristol–Myers Squibb, 137 S. Ct. at 1781. Here, Harvey brings six counts against the NHL alleging a variety of negligence-based and fraud-based causes of actions, including a claim for medical monitoring procedure costs. (See Compl. ¶¶ 480-535.) The basis of these claims, among other things, is the NHL’s alleged (i) “failure to warn” about the long-term risks of head injuries (id. ¶¶ 300-301); (ii) “promot[ion] and encourage[ment]” of violence in hockey (id. ¶¶ 24, 385-97); and (iii) failure to implement appropriate “concussion protocols” to prevent him from returning to play after sustaining a head injury. (See id. ¶¶ 457-61.) This purported misconduct was not alleged to have occurred in Minnesota.

From a plain reading of the Complaint then, Harvey’s claims do not “arise out of or relate to” any NHL contacts in Minnesota. See Bristol–Myers Squibb, 137 S. Ct. at 1780. And like the non-resident plaintiffs in Bristol–Myers, Harvey is a Canadian citizen, who does not plead any injury in Minnesota resulting from the NHL’s acts or omissions, or any other specific connection to the State. Id. at 1777–80, 17882. The Complaint is indeed silent as to the location of Harvey’s alleged injuries. (Compl. ¶¶ 122-125.) Harvey does not allege he was involved in a single hockey fight in Minnesota. (Id.) Further, Harvey never played for a Minnesota team in the NHL, and he does not allege he played an NHL game in Minnesota. (Id.) In sum, the Complaint does not allege any contacts that could support specific personal jurisdiction in this case.³

The Court thus concludes that the three main jurisdictional factors considered by the Eighth Circuit—the nature, quality, and quantity of the defendant’s contacts with the forum, and the relation of those contacts to the cause of action—weigh against exercising specific personal jurisdiction over the NHL. The two remaining, secondary factors—the interest of the forum and the convenience of the parties—do not alter the Court’s determination despite the underlying MDL.

While centralizing pretrial proceedings in the MDL court generally “conserve[s] the resources of the parties, their counsel, and the judiciary,” see In re Baycol Products Liability Litig., 180 F. Supp. 2d 1378, 1380 (J.P.M.L. 2001), the remaining secondary factors do not weigh in Harvey’s favor, in light of this Court’s prior ruling. In declining to certify the MDL-plaintiffs’ proposed classes, this Court held that each plaintiff’s claim is subject to an individualized choice-of-law analysis. NHL Players’ Concussion Injury Litig., 327 F.R.D. at 257. Thus, as no party here is a Minnesota citizen and the location of the injuries occurred elsewhere, it is unlikely that this forum would have a clear interest in providing a forum for out-of-state residents, applying the laws of a different State.

As to the convenience of the parties, the same considerations apply. In examining Harvey’s specific causes of action, his claims do not appear to turn on this forum. No party here is a Minnesota citizen, and there is no evidence in the record that any witnesses reside here, or relevant documents are in this forum. Because potential witnesses and documents are located elsewhere, the balance of convenience “is in equipoise.” See Datalink Corp. v. Perkins Eastman Architects, P.C., 33 F. Supp. 3d 1068, 1076 (D. Minn. 2014).⁴ All factors thus considered, the Court concludes that it may not exercise specific personal jurisdiction over the NHL here, at this juncture.

Harvey bore the burden to establish that the court’s exercise of personal jurisdiction would be proper, but failed to respond to the NHL’s motion. Because Harvey has not met his burden, the Court will dismiss his claims against the NHL without prejudice. LeDuc Gifts & Specialty Prod., LLC v. New Thermo-Serv, Ltd., 382 F. Supp. 3d 885, 892 (D. Minn. 2019) (dismissing the case without prejudice when plaintiff did not meet prima facie burden of establishing the court’s personal jurisdiction over defendant).

Accordingly, the Court grants Defendant’s motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction.

⁴ In accepting service of this action directly filed in the MDL, the parties agreed that the NHL reserved all defenses as to jurisdiction and venue. [Doc. No. 12.] The NHL’s refusal to waive these defenses also corroborates the Court’s conclusion that the MDL does not tip the scale in Harvey’s favor.

IV. ORDER

Based on the foregoing, and all the files, records, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2) [Doc. No. 41] is GRANTED.
2. The case is dismissed WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

LET JUDGMENT BE ENTERED ACCORDINGLY.
